Disney Makes Theirs Marvel

Think you spend a lot on comics? Disney just spent $4 billion—and they only bought Marvels!

Or, more specifically, they only bought Marvel... the company, that is.

On August 31st, Walt Disney Company announced an agreement to acquire Marvel Entertainment, Inc., in a stock and cash transaction with a value of $4 billion, subject to government clearance under the Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act and the approval of Marvel shareholders. The deal is likely to be finalized by the end of the year.

"This transaction combines Marvel's strong global brand and world-renowned library of characters including Iron Man, Spider-Man, X-Men, Captain America, Fantastic Four and Thor with Disney's creative skills, unparalleled global portfolio of entertainment properties, and a business structure that maximizes the value of creative properties across multiple platforms and territories," Robert A. Iger, President and Chief Executive Officer of The Walt Disney Company, said. "Ike Perlmutter and his team have done an impressive job of nurturing these properties and have created significant value. We are pleased to bring this talent and these great assets to Disney. We believe that adding Marvel to Disney's unique portfolio of brands provides significant opportunities for long-term growth and value creation."

"Disney is the perfect home for Marvel's fantastic library of characters given its proven ability to expand content creation and licensing businesses," added Ike Perlmutter, Marvel's Chief Executive Officer. "This is an unparalleled opportunity for Marvel to build upon its vibrant brand and character properties by accessing Disney's tremendous global organization and infrastructure around the world."

"We believe Marvel will be more valuable as a part of the Walt Disney Company than it is on a stand-alone basis," Disney Senior Executive Vice President and CFO Tom Staggs said, adding that one of the company's goals was to focus on some of the less well-known characters of the Marvel catalog and "develop them across multiple media and territories." Additionally, any third party licensing Marvel had worked out will be honored by Disney. "The deal that Marvel has put in place, which we have looked at, those deals generally stay enforced in the terms that they started with at Marvel... We're happy to assume these agreements as part of the transaction."

During the press conference held shortly after the announcement, DIsney talked about the importance of the characters in a variety of media, but they didn't specifically discuss any plans for the comics line itself. Iger said that he and Disney planned to "exploit the library of characters more broadly by leveraging Disney's infrastructure, but he stressed that "what Marvel has done a great job of doing is really looking at and understanding the characters and their stories and figuring out which ones make the most sense in how they operate in the market—we don't pretend to be more expert at this than they are."

Iger did indicate that viewers could expect to see more Marvel-based animation on Disney XD. "We actually have been looking to license more Marvel content for that channel in the future," explaining that Disney's infrastructure "gives us the opportunity to expose these characters to people around the world in a way that Marvel was only able to do in the past by going through a third party."

Both Staggs and Iger made it clear that Disney had great respect for the way Marvel managed and developed its many properties, and that there were no plans for Disney to micro-manage the company. "We believe in the creative team at Marvel, and we see no reason to upset the apple cart," Staggs said, to which Iger added that Disney's goal was "not to make 'Marvel/Disney.' It's in fact the opposite—to put a brighter spotlight on Marvel as a brand."

Marvel editor-in-chief Joe Quesada posted on Twitter that "it feels like Christmas morning. I haven't seen this much excitement in the Marvel halls since... well, ever! ... If you're familiar with the Disney/Pixar relationship, then you'll understand why this is a new dawn for Marvel and the comics industry.

Quesada tried to calm concerns that Disney might tamper with Marvel's publishing plans and editorial approaches. "Everybody take a deep breath," Quesada wrote. "All your favorite comics remain unchanged... This is incredible news and all is well in the Marvel U."

"I think it's a terrific deal which will be extremely beneficial to both companies. The synergy between them is perfect," Marvel's chairman emeritus Stan Lee told newsarama.com. "Nobody can produce and market franchises better than Disney, and nobody has the extensive library of characters that would make great franchises that Marvel has."

"Think of the fun I'll have since I'm positioned right smack in the middle of them – and maybe some extra cameos, too!" Lee added.

Since the announcement was made, there has been discussion regarding the long-term effects of this acquisition on the Boom Studios/Disney relationship. Boom has licensed a number of Disney properties, ranging from vintage classics like Walt Disney's Comics & Stories, Uncle Scrooge, Donald Duck, and Mickey Mouse to more contemporary franchises like The Incredibles, Toy Story, and Cars. While many have speculated that these Disney properties might find a new home at Marvel once current licensing contracts expire, neither Disney, Marvel, nor Boom had any comments on the matter.

Likewise, there's no news as to how this acquisition might affect Disney's in-the-works Kingdom Comics imprint headed by Christian Beranek, who was working with Ahmet Zappa to create graphic novels based on a variety of Disney film or television properties. ""Our purpose is to go back and re-imagine stuff that Disney may not have thought of, or they may have a mandate like 'Look, we have a lot of equity in something that is thirty years old that people are fond of,'" Beranek said last month at Wizard World Chicago. Is it possible that those projects might now appear under the Marvel imprint? Too early to say—and of course, it's still important to note that this deal isn't done quite yet, so any speculation regarding future publishing plans is just that.

And finally, it's worth noting that Robert Iger has "comics in his blood," so to speak. His great-uncle, Jerry Iger, is one of comics' Golden Age pioneers and was a business partner of legendary creator Will Eisner (The Eisner-Iger Studio was one of the most prominent comics book packaging ventures during the Golden Age, and such major talents as Jack Kirby got their start there).

•The Japanese company Kodansha has ended its long-standing manga licensing agreement with TokyoPop, who has brought such Kodansha properties as Chobits, Samurai Deeper Kyo, and Rave Master to American readers. According to Tokyopop, the publisher "will not be allowed to complete the publication of any series that is currently in progress. In addition, TokyoPop will not be allowed to reprint titles after the current inventory has been sold out... We hope to see these series completed some day... However, if they are ever published again, they will not be published by TokyoPop." Kodansha has recently announced publishing plans for such projects as Akira and Ghost in the Shell, which were until recently licensed to Dark Horse; it's quite likely that many of these titles will also appear in the US under the Kodansha imprint.

•DC has announced three more Blackest Night tie-in miniseries debuting in December: Blackest Night: Wonder Woman (written by Greg Rucka), Blackest Night: Justice Society, and the previously-reported Blackest Night: Flash (by Geoff Johns & Scott Kolins).

•Rumors regarding the possible cancellation of X-Factor have been put to rest with Marvel's announcement that the series would not only continue under writer Peter David, but would return to its legacy numbering with X-Factor #200. The relaunch will find X-Factor Investigations moving back to New York City, where they go to work for their new client—Franklin Richards!

•DCU Executive Editor Dan DiDio told fans at the Toronto Fan Expo that Green Arrow is the character to watch in 2010... but he offered no details on what DC has planned for the veteran archer.

•Once again Marvel will revisit their What If? franchise in December with five new oneshots: What If the Skrulls Won? What If Gwen Stacy Survived the House of M? What If the Heroes Lost World War Hulk? What If Daredevil Died and Was Resurrected by the Hand? And What If Jean Grey Had Returned Instead of Colossus.

•The Pet Avengers will return to comic shops in February with the launch of a new four-issue miniseries by Chris Eliopoulos & Ig Guara.
